Major Announcement

Friends, today we share something truly special. After three years of growing, learning, and standing together as a not-for-profit group... we are now officially a registered charity. This milestone belongs to all of us. To our admin team who work tirelessly behind the scenes, keeping both our main group and our loved ones' group running with care. To our trustees, who have guided us with wisdom and responsibility. And most importantly, to each of you, our members, our community. Your support, your voices, and your presence have carried us here.

What it means

Becoming a charity means we now have legal recognition and protection. We are accountable to the Charity Commission, which ensures transparency and trust. It means donations and fundraising can be handled with greater integrity, opening doors to grants and support we couldn't access before. It means our mission, dignity, visibility, and advocacy are not just heartfelt, but formally recognised as serving the public good. And it means we can grow stronger, reach further, and continue to stand for every patient, every family, and every story.

This is not the end of a journey; it's the beginning of a new chapter. Thank you for walking it with us.

Together, we are Life After Lary, and together, we are now a charity.

Life After Lary – our story

Life after Lary is the first organisation of its kind in the UK, created by a group of people who have lived every brutal, frightening, isolating moment of life after a total laryngectomy.

Until now, there has been no national charity dedicated solely to addressing the issues that arise after surgery. People are discharged into a world that no longer works the way it did the day before. Their voice has gone. Their breathing, eating, sleeping and confidence all change overnight. And the truth is this. Most are left to cope with that devastation alone.

Follow-up support is inconsistent, minimal or completely absent. Life after Lary steps into that void because nobody else ever has. This is not another neat, well-behaved health charity. It is a lifeline built by the people who actually need it. It is powered by lived experience, by scarred necks, by lost voices, by the courage it takes to rebuild a life from the inside out. That authenticity is why people flock to it. For many, it is the first time they have found somewhere they do not have to pretend they are coping.

The need has been ignored for decades. Around 700 people in the UK lose their natural voice permanently every year. The physical operation ends in a matter of hours. The emotional recovery takes years. Isolation, stigma, fear, embarrassment, identity loss, relationship strain and the daily graft of learning how to live again are common, yet almost entirely hidden from public view. These people have had nowhere to turn. No national support. No voice in the system. Nothing. Life after Lary is breaking that silence. It gives people connection, dignity and proof that they are not the only ones fighting this battle. It helps them reclaim who they are in a world that often stops seeing them the moment their voice changes.

Life After Lary - Charity Status - Press Release 01/01/2026

Life After Lary becomes a registered charity

Life After Lary becomes the first UK charity dedicated to supporting people after laryngectomy run by people with a laryngectomy. New charity aims to offer long-term support, community and advocacy for people whose lives have been changed by throat cancer. Life After Lary is pleased to announce that it is now officially a registered charity in the UK.

The charity will support individuals who have undergone laryngectomy or related treatment, offering peer support, practical guidance and advocacy to improve life after treatment.

Jon Organ, founder and joint CEO of Life After Lary, said: "Becoming a charity marks a huge step forward for Life After Lary. It gives us the foundations and the legitimacy to reach more people, strengthen our services and ensure that every person living after a laryngectomy has somewhere to turn. Too many people feel isolated after surgery, unsure where to find practical advice or a community that understands what life looks like now. Our aim is to change that. We are committed to building a supportive, inclusive community where people can share experiences, find guidance and feel less alone. We also want to be a strong voice on the issues that matter to those living with life after laryngectomy, from better awareness and understanding through to improved services and pathways of care. For us, this is about more than organisational status. It is about standing alongside people whose lives have changed forever and making sure they have the support, dignity and visibility they deserve."

Thank you's

We would like to express our deepest gratitude to our main sponsor S&J Cleaning Systems Ltd, whose generosity and belief in our mission have been with us from the very beginning. Their support as our main sponsor has not only strengthened our work but has truly helped us make a real difference. We're incredibly thankful for their commitment and partnership. We look forward to the future together and your continued support.

We would also like to extend a sincere thank-you to SLO and Atos Medical for their continued support. Their commitment and encouragement have played an important role in helping us move forward, and we're truly grateful for everything they've contributed and continue to contribute as we move forward.
